Old Opio lives fifteen kilometres from town. He goes to town once a month. He doesn't like sitting in the front seat. Opio prefers travelling by bus to travelling by taxi. He fears speeding taxis yet he fears to ask drivers to reduce the speed.

One morning, he got up early to go to town. It was half past nine, and he was late. He took a bodaboda to the nearest taxi stage. It took him ten minutes.

At the stage, Opio saw a policeman, "What is the right taxi to St. Balikuddembe market?" he asked.

"Any taxi going to the old park in Kampala," said the policeman.

Old Opio waited for the taxi. Two hours later the policeman came back.

"Are you still here?" asked the surprised policeman. "Yes, answered Opio, "but I am going soon."
