One day, the man decided to go on a journey. The pigeon asked him, "Please master, if you meet any other pigeons just greet them and tell them I send them my best wishes." The man said he would do so. But all the pigeons he met pretended to be dead, so the man walked past them.

When he came back, the man told the pigeon all these things, ending his tale this way, "Your pigeon friends pretended to be dead, so I left them lying there."

The next morning when the man woke up, he saw his pigeon lying dead in its cage. So he opened the cage, took out the pigeon and threw it away in the bushes behind his house. As soon as it was out of his hands, the pigeon spread its wings flying up to a high branch on which it perched.
