43. Read the passage below carefully and answer the questions which follow in full sentences.

I was only ten years old when they sold my sister away. That was two years ago. A few days before, the people had come. Three ugly women and four men. One of the four men wanted to be husband of my sister. I disliked the way he looked but my family and clan liked him very much. They said he came from a rich family. His father had many head of cattle and a large flock of sheep. It was true they were rich. They brought beer. They brought four thick blankets: one for the father, one for my mother, one for my uncle and one for my aunt. I saw her with my open eyes. I saw the father of my sister's husband-to-be pulling out a bundle of red hundred shilling notes. He gave them to my father. My father's hands trembled as he took the money. Cattle would be sent the following day. Nyamalo was away in boarding school. She did not know that at home she had been sold to a man she has seen only once, but had never talked to. Nyamalo did not know she was not a member of our household any longer. She was the wife of an ugly man: a man with big eyes, dilated nostrils, like those of a chimpanzee I had seen in a picture. She didn't know. Two days later my father told my brother Tumuku, to go and bring Nyamalo home from school. She had no more reason to continue schooling when a man had come home. Tumuku said no. I am not going, papa, and Nyamalo must be left to finish her schooling. She must not be married off at such a young age. She must be allowed to choose her own man when the time comes. The world has changed. My brother spoke politely but firmly. Alright you may stay my father said, but Nyamalo will go to her husband whether you like it or not. She is my daughter, not yours. Wait my dear son, until such a time as you have own daughter, then you may be listened to. That was the end of school for Nyamalo. Brought her home that weekend. When she was told, a flood of tears ran down her sweet cheeks. She screamed. 'I am not going,' she said. 'I am not going.' My mother also shed tears. I don't know why mother shed tears when she had accepted a blanket, drunk beer and smiled when father was given money.

QUESTIONS
