THE INTERNET

The internet is an international computer network connecting other networks and computers from other companies, universities and organisations through an internet service provider. The internet service providers include Yahoo, google, infocom, gmail and Hotmail.

An internet service provider provides you with an internet connection and services such as surfing, logging, e-mail. E-mail is the short form of electronic mail. E-mail addresses. An email address consists of a service provider and the user's name e.g.yigaali@google .com.Ug.

In order for one to log in or on, one needs a Pass word. The password allows one to begin using a computer system. At the internet cafe, one can have access to the internet explorer. This is a computer programme connected on the internet used for searching information.

Besides, one gets access to the search engine. A search engine is a computer programme that searches the internet for data for example by looking for documents containing a particular word or a group of words from the data base.

Data base is a store of information held in a computer. In order to access information, all one needs is to google. Google means to type words in a search engine on the internet in order to find information about something or somebody. For example, job opportunities, educational, political or commercial issues. This service is used as a form of communication. For instance, one can chat with pen-pals, peers and colleagues. It also enables individuals, organisations, companies and the government to send and receive essential messages and information all over the world within a short period of time. Furthermore, it reduces the costs and time that might have been spent for one to pay for air tickets to travel to different parts of the world in search of data.

Finally, the internet provides entertainment such as movies, sportsnews etc.
